Foreword

As a former editor of PHILIPPINE STUDIES, I am delighted to write these few lines of introduction to the special number which the present Editors are dedicating to the Loyola House of Studies.

The Loyola House of Studies will bring the theological and philosophical faculties of the Philippine Province of the Society of Jesus to the university campus of the Ateneo de Manila. It is hoped that this juxtaposition will result in more active collaboration and lively dialogue between our teachers and scholars in the sacred and in the secular disciplines.

For today, more than ever perhaps in the history of human thought, such collaboration and dialogue are necessary. If any doubt on this point remains, the articles contributed by such distinguished writers to this special number will doubtless serve to remove it.
